US and Chinese media are reporting that Washington has drawn up a proposal to create a 45,000-person joint U.S.-Chinese center for artificial intelligence (AI) research, focusing on enhancing bilateral cooperation between the two nations. The plan, according to the China Daily, follows an announcement by the U.S. Department of Defense in June announcing the first U.S. AI plan for China, which included creating five AI centers with 30 AI researchers. The proposal is said to be for a center on artificial brain research in the U.S., which will be led by a senior Chinese researcher. The other centers would be on semantic image research, voice recognition, natural language processing, cognitive computing, and quantum computing. "If the proposal is adopted, the 45,000 people with advanced technical expertise would be the global leaders in artificial intelligence," according to China Daily, which claims to be a Chinese state media outlet. The report also states that the goal is for the centers to be up and running by the mid-2020s, although as with many things in the tech sector it may be a little sooner than that. On the Chinese side, the proposal must be presented to parliament for approval before it can move forward, and there is also the possibility of the plan being voted down and dismissed outright, as well as the government being unable to find the money to start the projects. A separate report in Gizmodo says it was told that the proposal has been made public. The American side is said to have put in a ¥5 billion (US$0.67 billion) request in its recent US$15 billion budget for the U.S. Department of Defense. On the one hand, this seems like a fairly bold move by the Trump administration, which has been criticized by some in the AI community for a lack of direction in the arena. On the other hand, there's been some suggestion from high-level Trump administration figures that AI is the first area in which China will move aggressively in the new era. The president's recent talk of AI being one of the areas where the U.S. is less than 5 years ahead of China, and would be wise to act before Beijing does, appears to be borne out by some of the reported plan. AI is clearly seen by the Trump administration as an area which the U.S. is lagging behind in, but for the same reasons it is a long-term strategic area

Apache Spark and AWS Datasets and Spark SQL You can use Spark SQL just like SQL, but rather than being tied to a relational data store, it runs on top of a distributed cluster of machines. The benefit of this is that you can use Spark SQL against data from the RDBMS without the usual binding-to-a-database architectural constraints. This allows you to run queries against data that spans many data stores and databases. For example, if you have data stored in a relational database such as Oracle or MSSQL but you want to run Spark SQL against it, you can do that in one step. If you have a document store (e.g., S3) and data stored in a relational database (e.g., MSSQL) you can run Spark SQL against them in a single batch job. There are more examples of how to use Spark on AWS in the AWS Lambda Style Guide, using the Java, Python, and JavaScript APIs.Concerns about the impact of childhood obesity on the health of African Americans are expressed by the National Institutes of Health, the Surgeon General, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, and clinical experts in pediatrics. It has been argued that the problem is so alarming that it threatens the future of the nation, particularly in the urban areas. This assumption is based on studies from American white populations, but these studies did not examine the degree to which the problem exists for African Americans and the factors which might cause it to differ. The potential for an epidemic in African Americans has become more evident in recent years. Unfortunately, there are few population-based data on the prevalence of obesity and other indices of nutrition and health among African Americans. A major obstacle in addressing the problem is a dearth of information about the health of this group. The goal of this application is to collect data on health status, health care and nutritional practices in a sample of African American adolescents and their families in order to create a foundation for expanding the research base needed for the design of prevention and treatment strategies. The objectives of this study are to: 1) describe the nutritional practices and physical activity patterns of African American adolescents; 2) estimate the prevalence of overweight, underweight and obesity; and 3) determine the association between overweight, underweight and obesity and other health risk behaviors. To achieve these objectives, a sample of 600 African American adolescents and their parents will be recruited from public high schools in six representative sites in New York and one site in
