What Should I Do? A: This is a signing issue. When we downloaded the book, we were not required to sign it. Just know that if you download the book in black and white on the free bits website, you won't be signed. We also assumed that Adobe set our email to look for invitation for this book. So, when you download the book, you will need to add your email address (the one you use to download as pdf) to get the email with a link for you to sign in to Adobe and download it on your computer. Once you have signed the book, open it and it will be ready to print and sign as usual. Your pdf file should still look good. If you are concerned about that, try exporting it as a pdf again.

Altered expression of the growth arrest and DNA damage 45 alpha gene following acute or chronic exposure to dieldrin in rainbow trout (Oncorhynchus mykiss). Dieldrin is a very persistent organochlorine pesticide whose neurotoxic and immunotoxic properties have been characterized. One of its effects is genotoxic due to the induction of DNA strand breaks. The growth-arrest and DNA-damage 45 (gadd45) gene, which codes for a nuclear protein that is inducible by DNA-damaging agents, is able to protect cells from apoptosis and, thus, is a valuable tool for the detection and monitoring of the possible effects of environmental genotoxic agents. In this paper we have studied the expression of gadd45 mRNA in rainbow trout cells following acute and chronic exposure to dieldrin. We detected a maximum induction after a single exposure to 10 microM dieldrin (3.6-fold). However, the maximum induction (10.7-fold) was achieved with a chronic exposure to 0.03 microM dieldrin for 9 days. This finding suggests that the induction of gadd45 mRNA by dieldrin can be time- and concentration-dependent. The genes for Na(+)/K(+)-ATPase and actin were used as internal controls and were unaffected by dieldrin treatment, indicating that the effects observed in the gadd45 mRNA could be genuine. The induction of the gadd45 gene has been related to the dieldrin-induced genotoxicity. Furthermore, since the gadd45 gene has been shown to be under the control of a promoter that is transcriptionally controlled 3e33713323
