Herpesviruses of the human gammaherpesvirus subfamily, members of which include Kaposi's sarcoma-associated herpesvirus (KSHV) and Epstein-Barr virus (EBV), are associated with human cancers, including B-cell and T-cell lymphomas and carcinomas, Kaposi's sarcoma, Burkitt's lymphoma, nasopharyngeal carcinomas, and primary effusion lymphomas. The resulting disease is a serious, incurable disease that remains a public health problem worldwide. In addition to Kaposi's sarcoma, the gammaherpesviruses are associated with lymphoproliferative diseases such as pleural effusions, lymphomas, and pneumonitis in AIDS patients and with multiple sclerosis (MS) and other neurological disorders. KSHV is also associated with Kaposi's sarcoma, body cavities epithelium hyperplasia, multicentric Castleman's disease, and primary effusion lymphoma. Additionally, there are several mouse gammaherpesviruses (see Table 1, below) whose structural genes are known (e.g., MHV68, DAN, the murine gammaherpesvirus-68; and MuPyV, the murine gammaherpesvirus-68), but the pathologies associated with the mouse gammaherpesviruses are not well-defined. The long-term expression of the latency antigens, latency-associated nuclear antigen and viral microRNAs, is critical for gammaherpesvirus pathogenicity. Any method to interrupt the expression of these proteins, or to reduce their production, would be expected to limit virus-associated pathologies, and would be useful in the treatment or prevention of herpesvirus-related diseases. The long-term goal of the work proposed is to define the mechanism of gammaherpesvirus latency and to understand the role of the viral lytic cycle in disease pathogenesis. A successful outcome could then be used to develop novel treatments for the diseases associated with the gammaherpesviruses, as well as for other lytic and latent viruses.

* The Spot Healing Brush can be used to quickly correct larger areas of problems. The brush attempts to look like a human hand so it can quickly fix large areas of trouble. * The Scratch Brush cleans up small sections of an image. * The Soft Round Brush applies a soft brush to a particular area. This can be useful for adding round edges to an image. * The Gradient Glow Brush adds a new glow effect to an area. * The Gradient Overlay Brush adds a gradient to a photo. * The Rotate Tool lets you rotate your images for various effects. You may want to rotate images on the spot for effects like this. * The Layer Mask Option lets you reveal and hide portions of an image. When you use this mask, all the layers below are hidden. The mask can be hidden or revealed by simply clicking on it.
