She hesitated when she realized that the place was only a couple of miles from his home, and it was the first time that he had mentioned seeing her in Boston. Just looking at this picture made Hannah feel sorry for Neil. Since their divorce, Hannah had gotten her life in order, and she was a different person. She was even a different woman now, but the memories of having an affair, and a child that he abandoned left her with feelings of guilt that she never expected. Neil was now married to a woman named Tracey. Hannah wanted to hate her, but she felt sorry for her instead. Her best friend and brother-in-law had died when he was only 24, and now she was going to be a stepmother to Neil's two children. Hannah had never liked Tracey very much. She knew that Neil had been having an affair with her, and now she was stuck with her. He had already moved out of their house and into a smaller house with her; he was now in her town, and it was her job to take care of Neil, their children, and their situation. Hannah knew that Neil loved her, but she also knew that he had gone down a bad road and that the path that he was on was taking him away from her. Sometimes she wondered if he had left because she was pregnant with his child, but she refused to believe that; she knew that the child was his, and he was just embarrassed about it. Neil knew that his children loved him, but he was unable to deal with any of it, and it was obvious to Hannah. It was as if he was a robot, and he couldn't show any emotion. For example, when Hannah was pregnant, he would come home from work, and he would just walk into the kids' room and just hug them, but he wouldn't even say anything. He would just stare at them, and then leave. Hannah, being pregnant, made some decisions for her and the baby. It was obvious that she was going to have to quit her job, and she knew that she was going to have to leave their house. She knew that she was going to have to pack up her things and move, but she didn't want
