[Clinico-electrophysiologic study of the motor conduction velocity in the peroneal nerve in multiple sclerosis]. Fifty-six patients with clinically definite MS had been examined by means of different electrophysiological methods to detect motor conduction block (MCB) and axonal degeneration on the peroneal nerve. The MCB in the peroneal nerve was detected in 11 out of 24 MS cases (46.7%), and the electrophysiologic signs of the axonal degeneration in 12 out of 16 cases (75%). A correlation between MCB and clinical picture of the disease was not found. The same was observed in the relation between MCB and the histological signs of the remyelination, while the axonal degeneration correlated with the degree of the clinical symptoms. The authors suggest that the MCB is a direct electrophysiological marker of a generalised axonal degeneration, and it may be useful in early detecting the forms of MS with different prognosis. 7th Cir. 1998). In Toon, the court held the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motions to waive time. Toon, however, did not address or resolve the issue before this Court. [¶ 11] Speedy Trial Act calculations require a close review of the time calculation and the trial judge's reasons for granting or denying a motion to continue. The trial judge may grant a motion for continuance when either party needs additional time to prepare for trial. 18 U.S.C. § 3161(h)(8)(B)(iv). This court has long recognized that an indefinite or open-ended continuance need not be granted if the trial judge specifically 6d1f23a050
